With the winter season coming to an end, many southern areas will start anticipating hot weather in late spring and later in summer. With energy bills expected to rise due to the use of air conditioners, a door draft stopper is one of the items considered useful in helping to lower costs.

Monika's Marketplace has designed an easy to use, weighted door draft stopper that provides a solution in both cold and hot weather. In addition to helping homeowners reduce heating costs during the winter season, the product works in reverse during hot weather. It prevents warm, humid air from entering into rooms that have air conditioners running. Hot air can affect the energy efficiency of an air conditioning unit if not kept in check.

Currently available on Amazon.com, the door draft stopper from Monika's Marketplace is handmade in the USA. It is made from a heavy duty, durable cloth fabric and contains gravel and poly-fiber to help keep it in place. It is designed with a seam to help it fit snugly under doors of standard size, up to 37", and comes in the colors of burgundy with brown, red rose, and pink with brown.

With energy costs often spiking in areas that suffer from high heat, especially during summer months, the product is among items recommended for homeowners to help regulate the temperature in their homes. Not only does it work on most doors that have a small gap where they meet the floor, it also works on most surfaces, including carpet, tile, and hardwood.

A number of shoppers have praised the product since it was launched on Amazon. "When placed at the bottom of a door, it blocks most if not all air coming through that space, helping to keep your home properly heated (or, in the summer, chilled)," said Daniel Wiencek, a verified Amazon reviewer.

Homeowners who are concerned about the energy efficiency of their air conditioning units during summer months could consider using the weighted door draft stopper from Monika's Marketplace. The product is currently sold with a money-back guarantee and a bonus storage bag.
