Drug Guardians offers a comprehensive website listing drugs and devices with side effects and risks to consumers. The website was founded to assist consumers with legal rights due to injuries or drugs due to negligence or intentional deception.

Temecula CA: Drug Guardians and Weldon Stanford are pleased to announce the launch of their new website devoted to helping consumers stand up for their rights when they are injured due to negligence or intentional deception on the part of drug and medical device manufacturers. The founders of the website strive to provide comprehensive, up-to-date information on prescription drug and medical device safety concerns so that patients can make informed decisions about their health. The Guardians also seek to empower those affected by faulty or dangerous drugs or medical devices by providing detailed information regarding current recalls and ongoing class action lawsuits that they may be entitled to join.

The number of prescription drugs and medical devices on the market increases constantly, making it nearly impossible for consumers to keep up with the ever-expanding number of treatment options and their potential side effects. It is for that reason that the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is entrusted with the essential task of protecting the public from unsafe medical products.

Drug and medical device manufacturers may take advantage of FDA programs designed to facilitate the market availability of breakthrough products, and have in certain instances been shown to have concealed evidence of the risks their products pose in order to rush them to market.

A spokesperson for the website explained, "At Drug Guardians, we believe that knowledge is power. We partner with a nationwide network of licensed, insured attorneys with extensive experience advocating for the rights of patients and their loved ones who have been affected by misleading claims made by drug and medical device manufacturers or by defective or unsafe products."

The exclusive network of partner attorneys includes the top product liability attorneys in the nation. The partners have a demonstrated record of winning settlements for their clients. Together with the partner attorneys, the attorneys evaluate the details of the case, and help to determine whether the clients are entitled to financial compensation for medical expenses, lost wages, and pain and suffering.
