June 13, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Academic Muse, a company in Sacramento, CA has today released new information to help Professors and Graduate students finish writing their journal articles, dissertations, and books. This is done through a writing circle club, as well as through various hints, tips and other pieces of advice. It is hoped that this information will help stop more people from selling themselves short by not publishing as much as they could.

"I want to help you finish your dissertation, book or journal article", says Alan Klima from Academic Muse. "Writing prolifically is an art in itself, but one that everybody can master if they know what they are doing. It's required, these days."

One of the ways Alan Klima wants to help people with their academic writing is by offering a number of free eBooks. By signing up to the mailing list, which is free, members will receive a total of six eBooks through email. The first focuses on a specific technique that works in just five minutes. Then, they will receive "Clearing your way," followed by "Learning to write from the masters inside out", then "Getting free of what hinders you" and, finally, "Step-by-step to the writer's space". These five books combined should be enough to help any writer deliver top quality academic writing.

Klima is also keen to explain the different between novelists and academic writers. For novelists, the goal is to write a novel and have it published and thereby earn a living. For academic writers, however, the formula is very different.

"An academic writer has to write a book and publish it", adds Alan Klima. "Then, they have to teach and advise about the content, do services and more research and wait around six years. Then and only then will they be able to keep their job. This is a huge responsibility and shows just how important it is to get the writing productivity element right."

Klima also offers a Writer's Inner Circle. While enrollment for the current cohort is full, a new one will soon run again. This is an online writing club, often described as a bootcamp, where people can join in a community of similar writers and get advice and guidance from the best of the best.

Those who need help with academic writing, which generally is anyone who has to finish their work and get published to get a job or keep it, will be very well-served through the advice offered by Academic Muse. The information is presented in a very concise and understandable manner and is designed to really help improve writing overall. With the variety of free eBooks on offer, people have nothing to lose by giving it a try.
