Monika's Marketplace in Sanford, Florida, has announced that they have a new inventory of their popular microwave splatter guard. The company recently stated that although they have not run out of the product, it has gotten so popular on Amazon that their inventory has decreasing rapidly. They have since announced that they now have plenty of the food guards in stock and ready for shipment to customers.

"We just couldn't believe how popular this product has become in a short period of time," says a representative for the company. "And to show our gratitude, we're now offering a free recipe book with every order, delivered digitally to customers emails."

The company states that what makes their splatter guard so popular is that it does not contain BPA. The product is laboratory tested and certified to be BPA free, which makes it a safer choice than many other similar products on the market. Monika's Marketplace also states that the ease of use and cleaning help to make it popular as well.

"Our microwave splatter guard is designed to be very easy to clean, and saves a ton of time in the kitchen because you don't have to clean your microwave," says the company representative. "In fact, we hear from customers all the time that it's the easiest thing in their kitchen to clean. It just wipes clean or you can even throw it in the dishwasher."

The company says that the microwave cover works well with standard sized dinner plates and contains a vented steam release that helps to keep food warm for a longer time. The dish cover is domed and high enough so that it does not touch the food and offers an easy to lift handle for putting food into and out of the microwave. Due to its popularity, stocks quickly declined over the past few months and the company announced that they are now back to full stock and may even have overstocked as they prepare for the upcoming summer season.

The company states that anyone interested in learning more about the product or why it has become so popular so quickly can read their best microwave cover review on Amazon.
