June 17, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Clearwater, FL based beauty company Spalon Tech has just received fresh inventory at the Amazon warehouses just in time for customers summer vacations. After the Spalon Tech cellulite cream ran out of stock at all major retailers previously, the company scrambled to keep up with demand and bring it back on the market for customers seeking cellulite creams that work. According to their statements, these particular products are very popular among the female demographic. "Cellulite removal is a topic that is heatedly debated every year whenever bathing suit season starts, and Spalon Tech is one of the few companies which offer a product that is effective and works according to claims." declared one of the company's spokespersons.

Spalon Tech is well aware that the market is saturated with creams and scrubs that promise to make cellulite disappear, but, as they say, these products often offer poor or disappointing results. The difference between those products and what Spalon Tech has to offer lies in the ingredients used, as the company's representatives claim.

The product is made out of seaweed extract and caffeine. These two ingredients have been proved to increase circulation and reduce the appearance of cellulite. In addition, unlike most products of the same type, this particular cellulite cream is not water-based, but has a high concentration of organic aloe, which is meant to hydrate the skin and retain moisture. This is effective in reducing dimples and similar skin issues.

A company spokesperson expressed their opinion regarding the success of their product: "We are thrilled that our cream is flying off the shelves; that is the best indicator and incontestable proof that the product is high-quality and effective and the first thing women turn to before going on holiday for the summer. We couldn't be happier with the situation and we have increased our stock, accordingly."

The Spalon Tech representatives are not the only ones who are excited about the product; customers are also satisfied that they have a product they can rely on: "I am very pleased with how this cream performs for me. I am able to reduce the appearance of cellulite and my skin feels significantly smoother and firmer. I've been using it for a while now and I can say it's my favorite product from Spalon Tech."

Reviews on Amazon.com are all very positive, as well. Customers appear to be very impressed with the product and the results they are able to obtain after using it. The majority of the women using the cellulite cream have reported a dramatic difference in the way their skin looks and feels, attributing the positive aspects to the Spalon Tech cellulite cream.
