April 13, 2017 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Direct Hit Auto, an automotive marketing and advertisement company based in West Warwick, Rhode Island, has announced a new service for their automotive service industry customers. The company states that they are now providing a completely risk free way for automotive businesses to recover their lost service customers and turn those lost customers back into paying patrons.

"We are going to provide our service to customers on a Performance Based Model," says a representative of the company. "If we don't bring you the business then you don't pay. We only collect payment when we successfully send old customers back into your business. You are at absolutely no risk with regards to payment for our services."

The company states that auto services that have lost customers can use their lost service customer recovery service to get those customers back and keep them coming back. They state that the service will be available for auto businesses for no money down. Direct Hit Auto will only get paid by its customers when their own customers have paid them.

"All you have to do is just send us your dead list from nine months to a year ago," says the company representative. "Our team will take care of all of the marketing and advertising for you. All you have to do is just wait for those old service customers to call and come back."

The company states that they will send aggressive offers in front of those old customers, which are offers that those customers will not be able to turn down. This will get customers coming back to the automotive shop and put those old customers back on the service books. Direct Hit Auto works exclusively with automotive service companies, a fact that they say helps them to stay focused and ahead of the game with regards to marketing and reaching out to past customers.

Automotive groups and dealerships who may be interested in the company's new offer can learn more by watching an explainer video about the service. Those interested can also visit the company online to get an overview of what they do and the types of customers that they serve.
