

Dean Stojic Challenges President Trump On National Addiction Policy

Dean Stojic, founder of LiveFreeTraining.org has announced a challenge, and a solution, for President Trump on the issue of our countries national addiction problem.

Addiction is one of the largest threats to America right now. With around 90% of Americans going without treatment, and $442 BILLION spent on addiction annually (twice that of diabetes). Many of them are beginning as teens and it?s becoming an epidemic.

Trump?s platform was of protecting our youth, reversing the inner city blight for minorities, and keeping America safe. He even addressed congress saying ?we will stop the drugs from pouring into our country and poisoning our youth ? and we will expand treatment for those who have become so badly addicted."

This statement touched Dean Stojic who has decided to start the ball rolling by offering scholarships to his online addiction recovery program and challenges President Trump to sponsor a National Addiction Recovery bill. ?A friend asked me to help her family member who was addicted and so naturally I did. Then while I was in the gym doing my daily routine, I realized that there is no single person on the planet that could not be my friend at one point ? so why not help them all? In that moment I decided to direct my funds and start offering scholarships for the ones in need, as much as I can.?

LiveFreeTraining.org is inspired by Dr. Will Horton's 30 years long research and experience, and it offers a whole new approach to the problem of traditional rehab clinics, which is their high relapse rates. It is their observation that clinics seem to be in the "retention business" because long-term success is so low. Meaning ? patients are likely to come for a treatment more than once, more often than not. Actually, the chance of relapsing is much higher, within the 1st year alone.

The near $30,000.00 per patient spent on each and every vacation style rehab center is great for a clinic's bottom line (with leads being bought and sold for thousands each) but horrible for patients staying clean long-term.

The problem isn't really in the center's treatment methods but in the location of the rehab. They are attracting patients to beautiful locations with great living conditions like in South Florida, aka "Rehab Paradise" among the Palm trees. With warm weather and sandy beaches, rehab is like 28 days of bliss. "But that's the problem, trying to treat something out of the environment where you acquired the addiction is akin to going on vacation to save your marriage. It's great for a week, but when you get back home the same problems arise again. This is why the failure rate is so high," says Dean Stojic.

Mr. Stojic explains why patients relapse into their old addiction patterns once they enter the old environment: "They have the same triggers, the same friends, same challenges and same stresses" naturally, before you know it most of them end up going back to using. This is where the problem lies: The typical therapy being offered is basing its success on an environment change, not the "in-vironment" where the patient became addicted. This is what we focus on, we treat our patients from their home where they have to live day to day, and stay clean and are seeing great results because of it.?

Groundbreaking Neuro restructuring techniques help reprogram the mind for recovery. "By helping people where they are, they get better in the environment they live in, this will help stop that heartbreaking issue of someone going away to treatment, but relapsing as soon as they get home," says the creative protocol director of the program. In other words, they do what works.

Online Addiction Recovery Training was founded to help those who can't afford traditional treatment. Without the need for on-premise resort-like rehab, costs drop dramatically. They also found many who just can't get away for 28 days, who are single parents or those who are self-employed, as well as those who need to keep an addiction issue private due to work concerns (think security clearance, or sensitive jobs like medicine or teaching) are able to get help via online rehab quickly and easily.

When looking at the numbers, the nation's addiction problem is not going away. The recent rise in opioid, pain pills, and heroin, addiction and deaths are bleak evidence that the issue has grown and when you add in binge drinking on college campuses, it shows the need for new ways to attack the problem. Hence, Dean's challenge to President Trump to sponsor a National Addiction Recovery Bill. "We have taken the first step by offering scholarships and the ability for others to "pay it forward" by making donations to help out until the POTUS can begin his plans on how to best address this growing problem."

Stojic believes in reaching many more of the millions of Americans that are addicted to lasting change, and says two things need to be addressed:

1) The cost of treatment and more importantly, 2) the effectiveness of that treatment.

"We know we have the beginning of that solution with our program and are eager to work together to help fulfill our dream of a drug-free America," Dean Stojic said.

"Live Free capacity is near 100 clients per month at the moment and is implementing systems to be able to scale quickly. If President Trump backs a National Addiction Recovery bill we could begin to look at not only getting more Americans treated but also the success rate of those going through treatment, without the massive costs associated with traditional rehab treatment," said Stojic.

A recent Live Free graduate Lisa Hubbard relayed her experience with addiction training at Live Free Online Addiction Training, saying "I was prescribed pain medication for 20 years and took it religiously. I realized I was no longer participating in life and tried countless times to stop taking them. Nothing worked and I mean nothing. That is until I found the online Live Free Addiction Recovery Training Program...Using hypnosis and NLP together this program taught me so much and really allowed me to finally take control. I cannot recommend this program enough not only for those who struggle with addiction but anyone. You will learn how to program your brain for success. I guarantee this program is going to blow the entire addiction treatment out of the water...Thank you for giving me my life back. I have to pinch myself every day because I still can't believe how great I feel and how happy I am."
