June 16, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Littleware Containers of Eagle Mountain, UT has entered the market of baby food containers by launching their new product, goBaby, in a set of 12 containers. Littleware Containers, already boasting a size-able customer base, has decided to further promote its new product by launching at a discounted price. The focus of the goBaby containers has been directed to maintain customer convenience as its cornerstone.

Littleware's goBaby food containers are manufactured to make sure they are compatible with existing facilities involved in baby care. The 2 inch diameter of the container enables it to be used in a bottle warmer, while the shape of the lid has also been given due consideration to allow for expansion of food while stored in the freezer. This brings the attention to the durability and the safety of the materials used for the containers. Baby food containers have to be carefully selected using only FDA approved materials for storing food for babies. This is essential as most metabolic systems of a baby are comparatively more fragile to that of adults'. While a material used in food processing might be relatively safe for an adult, it might prove to be harmful to a baby. Here is another sphere in which Littleware's baby food containers show attention to detail as the materials used in the manufacture do not contain chemicals like BPA and Phthalate.

Continuing with the array of utilities offered by Littleware's new product, the baby food containers is microwave safe, can be washed in a dishwasher and can also be safely stored in a freezer. Some customers have also provided feedback on the product saying that they have heated baby food by placing the containers in a water bath on the stove. In addition to this, by manufacturing the food containers in the U.S. to the certified standard of ISO 9001, comprehensive product quality assurance is also achieved.

Since the launch of goBaby, there have been a number of positive reviews from customers who have expressed their approval and satisfaction regarding the convenience and quality the baby food containers offered. This has led Littleware's new product to achieve an impressive score averaging at 4.8 out of 5 stars on Amazon website. Some customers have even reported their admiration that the containers proved to have additional features to those that are listed on the product description. For example, one customer was pleased to find out that unlike most other similar food containers, the Littleware containers did not stain after several times of use, even when fruit purees were stored in them. In an increasingly competitive market, subtle positive aspects of the goBaby food containers make this product a more attractive choice for customers at a special promotional price.
