Since 2009, Erus Energy has been providing residential and commercial solar energy systems and services. The company was recently acquired by GPB Capital.

Phoenix AZ: Erus Energy is pleased to announce a new partnership with GPB Capital as a foundation for dynamic growth in the field of residential and commercial solar energy systems and services. The energy firm has been operating for over eleven years, first as a licensed general contracting business specializing in high end custom home builds. In 2009, Erus entered the solar energy business and turned its focus exclusively on residential and commercial solar projects. Erus Energy is one of the most respected brands in the industry, maintaining its A+ rating over 7000 clients from Arizona to the Carolinas.

According to Jesse Gee, Chairman, speaking to an interviewer, "Our new partnership with GPB provides Erus a launch pad to be one of the most dynamic, fastest growing energy companies in the United States. We focus on clean solar energy production, as well as energy efficiency measures in order to deliver our clients maximum value."

With the partnership of GPB, Erus has become a fully integrated business, offering financing, installation, ongoing maintenance and service to residential and commercial customer in markets across the United States. The leadership position of Erus is supported by a unique and proprietary sales process. The professional team focuses on the education of their customers. Erus takes a holistic approach to energy production and savings.

Residential communities throughout the United States are moving to home solar panels. Home panels can lower power bills, boost energy independence, create more jobs and help to reduce the carbon footprint.

GPB Capital has acquired Erus as part of its goal of building a billion dollar, fully integrated green energy business. GPB is based in New York and is noted for its emphasis on private equity and asset management. The acquisition of Erus is a keystone investment in the energy strategy of GPB Capital.
