

?I realized there wasn't a comprehensive list of features that are available among eLogbook apps. It would have been a lot easier to answer those questions if there had been a list that showed all of the possible features, and which of the popular logbook apps supported each of those items.?

VeArd and his team have compiled a list of thirty six features that pilots can look for in their eLogbook software, with the three top eLogbook apps listing whether or not they include that feature.

He acknowledges the limitations of such a list. ?Of course, eLogbook software is my business, so the PilotPartner Logbook is the standard by which we're going to measure all other software. And different factors are going to be important to different people, so pilots who use this checklist will have to use their own priorities and judgment. Also, recognize that it's a moving landscape. We release new features all the time, so any list like this will be a snapshot in time.?

?A complete checklist is really helpful for pilots considering the options,? said Private Pilot Paula Williams. ?Software can be complicated, and as a consumer, we don't all have time to research every possible option, and we may not be aware of all of the questions we should ask when comparing eLogbook software.?

The checklist can be downloaded from PilotELog.com.

About Pilot Partner

It all started in 1997 when a software developer, Ken VeArd, showed up to a local flight school to learn to become a pilot. Before his first solo, Ken was frustrated with his paper logbook and knew there had to be a better way. He started developing his own Software Database to track his own flight. Ken built it just for himself and never thought about making it public. His instructor, Carl Lindberg, saw the program and said, ?This is pretty good, you should clean it up and sell it.? Pilot Partner was born. Over the next couple years Ken continued to upgrade Pilot Partner and sold it on several aviation related shops. Over 2,000 copies were sold.
