There are many reasons as to why people require compression on their lower legs, including to avoid deep vein thrombosis (DVT) and spider veins. Wanderlust is a company in Burlingame, CA, that originally set out to create products specifically for those who enjoyed walking, hiking, and running, but they quickly found that many of their customers would use their products for compression support as well. To meet this growing demand, they have recently released their medical compression socks.

"More and more people are traveling long distances in airplanes, and are looking for socks with the right compression to protect them from problems such as DVT," says a representative from Team Wanderlust. "Additionally, there has been a significant increase in the number of people with diabetes, who also require compression for proper circulation. Our new socks are perfect for both these issues and more."

In fact, the support stockings, which are suitable for men and women alike, are perfect not just as a diabetic aid, but also for medical nurses or other people who spend a lot of time on their feet, pregnant women, travelers, those with arthritis, and more. The socks have been designed to offer 25-30 mmHG at the foot and ankle, 15-20 mmHG at middle of the leg and calf, and 10-15 mmHG under the knee. This is the ideal amount of stocking compression support to easily get on and off the legs, without feeling too tight.

The compression socks are proving to be very popular, with people hailing their effectiveness. "I found the need for these late in life, and tried so many others... Many would not stay up, and therefore were of no use for the purpose of lower leg compression. These stay up and what's better, they feel like normal socks..." says an Amazon customer.

For Wanderlust, the goal is to make sure their customers can always be comfortable and live a happy, healthy, and active life. All products are extensively tested in their research and development department. In fact, the company is so sure of the quality and effectiveness of their products, they offer them with a 100% satisfaction guarantee.
