The Butler Law Firm, which is based in Houston, TX, is always at the forefront of new developments in the law. This also means staying up to date with new technological developments, and how these affect society as a whole. As such, they have released new information on the topic of autonomous driving cars and getting a DWI/DUI.

Jim Butler, owner and founder of the Butler Law Firm, says: "The question is whether it possible to get a DWI/DUI if you are in a self driving car if you are in the driver seat. Considering that you are not technically driving, it would be hard to imagine how this could happen. These are things that we aim to answer. If you have found yourself in this predicament, give us a call today for your free consultation. We also offer payment plans for those who do require representation."

The Butler Law Firm is keen to inform people that autonomous selfdriving cars DUI convictions are becoming increasingly common, and it is important that people know what their rights are. Jim Butler adds: "Autonomous self-driving cars offer hope for a safer future. But there are a slew of ethical and legal challenges. The question of its implications for a DWI or DUI arrest rank high on the list of concerns. It boils down to a determination of the individual's role in the operation of a vehicle. Some states such as Texas don't have a clear definition."

Law enforcement professionals have been looking into this issue as of late. This comes after people have purchased the Tesla, which is being marketed as autonomous driving but is not actually 100% self-driving. Unfortunately, a number of people have already been found sleeping behind the wheel of their Tesla. Furthermore, Uber has already crashed a self-driving vehicle.

For the DWI attorneys Houston residents can go to, there are some complexities in autonomous vehicles. The key difficulty is that the law does not define 'operating' when it comes to who is operating the car. This is therefore open to various kinds of interpretation. The information recently posted on the Butler Law Firm's website highlights all the complexities involved with these types of vehicles, and how they are changing the way the law is interpreted.
