July 18, 2017 -

Finding spacious, high-end workspaces has become an ordeal for the average professional and enterprise. It's become a long-winded experience that becomes frustrating and downright nauseating. To eliminate some of these concerns, industry experts have taken the time to remove inferior options and list the top leaders in town. Professionals seeking the perfect fit will know these five shared workspaces are the best at what they do and will provide comfortable results immediately.

Recently, National Press Distributors has released a thorough analysis report of the most customer centric shared workspaces in the city. This extensive project came to a conclusion after National Press Distributors analyzed public customer reviews of the top shared workspaces in the United States.

With a state-of-the-art facility and a plethora of amenities, ATLAS Workbase (www.atlasworkbase.com) has established itself as a high-end option among all shared workspaces. It's a flexible, organized setup built with business needs in mind. The flexible, competitive rates are a complete bonus for organizations or individuals wanting a seamless experience that's budget-friendly. It works on these requirements and implements them into a comprehensive solution. ATLAS Workbase is a complete solution built from the ground up in providing illustrious results that are at the top of its industry. For a shared workspace, this is a clear leader in the city.

Sara Kappler on Google said, "Love this place. Friendly, professional, comfortable space with all the amenities one needs. Central, free parking, great WIFI, good coffee & snacks. Food looks good too though I haven't tried personally. Happy occasional customer - the 5 hour passes are great for what I need."

WeWork South Lake Union is another unique workspace that's well-decorated and has all the offerings one would need from a location such as this. It provides an exclusive experience and provides access to a set of professionals from all walks of life in Seattle. WeWork South Lake Union is a top-end option and one that does have a rigorous quality control process in place to meet client needs. This attention to detail is icing on the cake for professionals seeking a quality place to work during the day. The rates are competitive, and it does yield good results as a workspace. It is a top-end option and one that does have a rigorous quality control process in place to meet client needs. This attention to detail is icing on the cake for professionals seeking a quality place to work during the day.

Jonathon Loos on Google said, "Very well-managed communal working space in South Lake Union. I shopped around Seattle looking for a dedicated desk in a co-working space, and found this location to have the best value. Sleek offices, welcoming communal spaces, and equipped kitchens, with top-notch professional amenities for printing, conferences, and phone calls. Staff are extremely helpful and accommodating. The building has a productive-buzz balanced with weekly social events and happy hour. I've been referring to it as a work-playground. Very happy to have moved my remote working location here!"

Works Progress is a homely workspace that's cozier than some of its contemporaries but provides a seamless experience nonetheless. It's run by owners Marnee and Candice who are top professionals and recognize the needs each individual has. Works Progress is an elite option and one that remains among the leaders in Seattle. A shared workspace should offer a comprehensive experience in a clean environment, and this does everyone would want.

Michael Roufa on Facebook said, "This is the third coworking space I've been a member of over the past three years, and I've been working here for more than a year. It's by far the best. The space is great. The owners are very proactive and continually make improvements to the space. They're also on-premise every day so when problems do arise they get fixed FAST. Everybody is friendly and considerate in the open spaces so it's easy to get into a good flow. Highly recommended!"

Another option is Urban Worklofts. The location is convenient, the management is professional, and the setting is clean. It packs quite the punch for a shared workspace in the heart of Seattle. Urban Worklofts is a great option and one that provides seamless parking for those driving in. It continues to act as a top-tier option and is a valid choice for professionals in the city.

David Theimer on Google said, "Best move our business has made almost 4 years ago now. They understand the needs of a small business. So Kind, Courteous, and very flexible when needed. We really appreciate the staff and amazing Work Space @ Urban Worklofts!"

Lastly, The Pioneer Collective's welcoming and quiet location is an ideal spot for professionals wanting a great experience while working on their projects. Whether it's a small team or a large one, The Pioneer Collective is a good fit. It's a collection of rooms that have been joined together and does offer a robust set of amenities.

James W. on Yelp said, "I have held an office with the Pioneer Collective for 6 months. After checking many of the shared office spaces in the city, the Pioneer Collective immediately felt like the right fit. It is one of those office spaces one is excited to enter every day. It is a lively yet peaceful space, filled with interesting and engaging people. The monthly cost was fairer than other spaces, and the amenities are very comparable. I would highly recommend this space for anyone new to Seattle looking for a part time or full-time office."

All of these shared workspaces are comprehensive in their offerings and do deliver the goods when it comes to desired results.
