All Star Roof Systems, a business in Spring, TX, watched in horror, as did the rest of the world, when Hurricane Harvey made landfall in Corpus Christi and then proceeded to devastate Houston and other areas. Owner Joel Chesney immediately realized that he would need to do something to help in the recovery process. As a roofing contractor, the business decided to help in rebuilding some of those homes that have been affected by the hurricane.

Joel Chesney says: "They say that this was the biggest hurricane to make landfall in 12 years. It is certainly the worst storm we have seen since Hurricane Wilma. I am a Texan through and through and knew I would have to do something. Yes, Harvey has destroyed communities but it has also brought them together. This storm has been one of the worst hurricanes, but it has shown us our humanity again. We have been there to help from day one, and we will continue to be there to help until the communities are back on their feet."

The Houston metal roofing company covers the entire greater Houston area and already has tools and people in place to start helping in the recovery and rebuilding efforts. Luckily, their business premises have been left pretty much untouched by the storm, bar a little bit of water damage to their office furniture.

Chesney adds: "We have been really lucky and we're really aware that others were not. But this thankfully also means that we are now good to go to help in rebuilding. We're already in contact with the insurance companies as well, so people don't have to worry about that either."

Indeed, the links the company has with insurance companies is something that others have always been very appreciative of. Michael B., for instance, says on their website: "Joel was awesome. He worked directly with my insurance provider to ensure their estimate was accurate and realistic. His crew was courteous and efficient. The job included removing existing metal roof, previous cedar shake and replacing gutters. I highly recommend All Star Roof Systems and have a beautiful new metal roof that will last my lifetime."
