Las Vegas, Nevada based fitness company Rip Toned Fitness has announced the release of a product onto the Amazon.fr marketplace. The company has recently announced that their weightlifting straps, which have become quite popular on the United States based Amazon marketplace, are now available for customers in France.

Mark Pasay, a representative for the company, says: "Our weightlifting straps were popular in the United States right out of the gate. They hit the bestseller's list on Amazon pretty quickly and because of this massive popularity, we wanted to offer them to a more global customer base."

Customers in France can now purchase Rip Toned Fitness' Sangles de levage via the Amazon marketplace. The straps are designed to help lifters to steady their lift while reducing the possibility and risk of injuries that are common in weightlifting. Pasay says that the weightlifting straps offer a number of benefits to users.

"These will help to balance your lift so that you have fewer worries of putting too much strain on your wrists," Pasay states. "After observing the product's performance in marketplace here in the United States, we realized that these straps are very popular and wanted to give lifters in other countries a chance to try them for themselves."

Pasay states that the lifting straps are made of high quality materials and help fitness and bodybuilding enthusiasts to get more from their lifting sessions. He says that the number of positive reviews on the United States based Amazon marketplace helped the company to come to the decision to offer their products to a global audience.

Previously, Rip Toned Fitness offered weight lifting lifting straps to customers in Spain and Italy, and Pasay says that it will not be long before these products are offered to other countries. He states that the company provides a wide range of fitness products, all of which the company hopes to provide to customers from around the world eventually. While Rip Toned did not state when all of their products would be offered to a global marketplace, they did state that customers in France and other countries can check the Amazon marketplace to stay informed of when products are available in their countries.
