Rip Toned Fitness, a fitness products company, had recently introduced a set of weightlifting straps onto the Amazon marketplace. Since their initial launch in the United States, those straps have become very popular, prompting the company to introduce them into markets in other countries. The company has now announced that their straps are available to order through the Amazon marketplace in Spain.

Mark Pasay, a representative for Rip Toned Fitness, says, "People in the United States absolutely loved these weightlifting straps. So much so in fact that we decided to offer them in Spain, as well as other countries on a more global scale."

Pasay says that the lifting straps offer support for those who engage in powerlifting, weightlifting or general fitness to help them to avoid certain injuries. He explains that by keeping the wrists firmly supported, the risks for developing strains, sprains and other injuries can be significantly reduced.

Rip Toned states that due to the massive popularity of their lifting straps in the United States, they have made the decision to venture out into other global markets with this and other products that they offer. Pasay says that they are fully aware that weightlifting is not just an American sport and that they hope lifters in other countries will find their products as helpful as those in the United States have.

"You don't just pick up weights and lift them without causing damage, particularly if you aren't using lifting straps," Pasay adds. "And to ensure that users are avoiding injuries, we offer videos on how to use lifting straps that are very beneficial."

The company recently released their wrist wraps in Italy as well as Spain, France and Germany in an effort to branch out their market on a more global scale. Those interested can learn more about Rip Toned Fitness as well as the products that they offer by visiting them on any of the Amazon marketplace websites that they are now part of. The company states that they plan to offer additional products to other countries in the near future and states that they may open up their customer base to include even more countries as well.
