Best Microwave Cover Back In Stock

Monika's Marketplace in Sanford, Florida, has announced that their best microwave cover is back in stock. The company had recently announced that the microwave cover was out of inventory due to an unexpected high increase in sales over the past few months.

A representative for the company says, "We recently experienced high sales volumes that depleted our inventory and unfortunately, we had to tell our customers that our popular microwave cover was not available. We have since replenished our inventory, just in time for the upcoming holiday selling season and hope to be able to fill all orders from now until after the holidays."

The company states that the microwave food cover is a very popular gift item. It helps to keep microwaves clean from food splatters and fits most standard dinner plates that are ten and a half inches round and three and a half inches high. The cover is dishwasher safe on the top rack and cleans up easily.

"It's a wonderful gift item for someone who seems to have everything," says the company representative. "We fully expected our sales to increase during the holidays, but this recent spike in sales caught us a bit off guard. We know that it's a great product, and now our customers know this as well."

The company states that the cover is a high domed lid with a vented steam release so it will not touch the food. It has been lab tested and certified for use in microwaves and contains no BPA, a fact that the company believes may be what caused the surge in sales. The representative says that many microwave food covers are being sold that are not certified to be BPA free. Many consumers now know the dangers of using products with BPA, particularly for heating, which is likely why this particular cover has become a bestseller on the Amazon marketplace shortly after its initial launch.

Monika's Marketplace urges customers who were not able to order the microwave cover recently to visit the Amazon marketplace to order it now. The company states that they hope to keep the product in inventory to ship to customers during the busy holiday season.
