September 25, 2017 -
Las Vegas, Nevada based Rip Toned Fitness has announced that their popular lifting straps are now available to customers in Canada. The Rip Toned lifting straps have previously been released on the United States based Amazon marketplace and the company has observed that the straps have become such a popular product that they decided to also offer them to customers in other countries. A representative for the company states that after the initial launch of the products in Canada, they have become quite popular.

"We had no idea when we launched the Rip Toned lifting straps that they would become such a hit," says Mark Pasay, a representative for the company. "They were instantly popular so we decided to offer them to customers in Canada, as well as other countries and that has proven to be an excellent move on our part."

Pasay says that the straps have also been released in Italy, France, Germany and Spain, as well as being available in the United States. He points out that one thing the customers have praised about the popular lifting straps, is that they can also access web content and video tutorial to help lifters make sure that they are properly using the straps and getting the most out of their workouts.

"These things are now all the rave in Canada on Amazon," says Pasay. "Just in the short time that they have been available to Canadian customers, they've become one of our most popular products."

The lifting straps are designed to ensure that weightlifters do not strain or otherwise harm themselves when lifting. Pasay says that only the best and highest quality of materials are used to make the straps and states that they offer balance and support for weightlifting amateurs and professionals alike.

The lifting straps are designed for power lifters, weightlifters and those who want to protect themselves from injury when lifting. Pasay states that because the straps have become so widely popular in the United States as well as other countries that they have been launched in, the company is considering their launch in additional areas and are currently discussing launching their other fitness and workout products in other countries as well.
