Buffalo, NY business Enzo's Private Selections have just released their new lunch box set. The set comes with ten separate lunch boxes and each box has three compartments.

It was designed to enable people to bring different types of foods to work or school without mixing all the foods together and ruining the whole meal. It's also convenient for food storage in the kitchen or freezer. This way, people can enjoy varied and healthy meals at all times.

"The problem with taking your lunch to work in one single box is that everything gets contaminated," says Robert Cruso from Enzo's Private Selections. "You end up with a baloney sandwich that has a slight hint of banana when bit into it. Our new lunch boxes completely eliminate this problem."

Enzo's Private Selection is a newly formed company that aims to bring products to the world to make life easier, more enjoyable and healthy. Their new food storage container helps not just to keep food separate in different containers, but also to help people store their leftovers and other dishes safely in the fridge or freezer.

It was also designed with dieters in mind. It gives them more control over what they eat. With three compartments, it mimics the Eat Well plate, allowing people to have the right amount of each section of the plate without having to take measurements.

"Each compartment is of equal size," adds Robert Cruso. "Hence, a dieter can fill one compartment with fruit and vegetables, one compartment with their carbohydrates, and one compartment with proteins, fats and sugars. It is an easy way to have a balanced, nutritious meal."

The containers can be stacked and are dishwasher safe. That said, the Bento box is fully reusable. They also happen to be made from recyclable materials, which means they'll never have a negative impact on the environment. It comes with a secure lid that easily locks in place, ensuring that all food stays fresh and tasty.
