Govivo Releases Running Belt for the Smartphone Age

June 30, 2015

June 30, 2015 -
Govivo of Greenfield Park, Quebec, an innovative company supporting personal wellness, has added a new running belt to its line of fitness gear. Now available on Amazon, the running belt features superior design and accommodates the latest generation of larger smartphones like the iPhone 6 Plus.

Committed to supporting happy and balanced lives, Govivo designed its new running belt so that people can stay connected while taking care of their bodies.

"The two-pocket design of our new running belt keeps keys and other items from rubbing against a phone's screen while allowing someone to have necessities on hand even during exercise," said the company's media director, who included more information about the belt on the company Facebook page at https://www.facebook.com/simplygovivo.

The main compartment of the new belt measures 7.5 inches wide by 4.5 inches high. In addition to iPhones, this pocket will hold other smartphone models such as the Samsung Galaxy S5 and Samsung Note 4. The second pocket is a little smaller at 7.5 inches wide by 2.5 inches high. Keys, coins, credit cards, money clips and other essentials can be carried in this section of the belt to keep them from scratching the screen of a smartphone.

Strong zippers on the pockets secure the contents. Govivo chose the high-quality zipper brand, YKK, to supply zippers for the manufacture of its newest running belt that sets the bar above competitor products. The belt's adjustable elastic conforms to many body sizes, and the quick-clasp release buckle allows people to put it on easily or remove it quickly.

The materials throughout the belt and compartments are water resistant, a feature favored by people who enjoy jogging in all weather. Additionally, a runner's perspiration will not impact the belt or its contents. Govivo offers a lifetime warranty on its new running belt sold on Amazon at http://www.amazon.com/govivo, where it could qualify as a free shipping order.
