December 20, 2017 -
Campfire Travel in Wilmington, Delaware recently announced that they have reached their 21st edition. The online magazine states that all 21 editions of Campfire Travel magazine can currently be viewed on their website. In addition, the magazine offers a community website that is free to join, where members can view the e-magazines and interact with other campers and RV owners.

David Hall, a spokesperson for the magazine says, "We do more than just give you something to read. We offer contests, video sharing, games and you can chat with others who share in the same interests as you do. We are a community of campers and RVers and we wanted to bring everyone together to share in the joys that they get from their travels."

Hall says that the Campfire Travel online magazine offers more information about joining the community and shows a listing of the 21 editions of the magazine, all of which can currently be read online. He states that the goal of the website is to offer entertainment and news to camping enthusiasts all around the nation. Each month, the magazine focuses on four or five different states in the nation and highlights the campgrounds and RV resorts that are found in those states. Each magazine edition also offers free vacations and prizes to members.

"You want to join our community," says Hall. "You have access to so much information about camping and RVing, including where you should stay, what you should see while you are traveling and even the best places for you to park your RV overnight. Also, there are so many contests and prizes to be won. We try to make it fun for everyone and we think that each new edition just gets better."

The online magazine community is free to join and members can begin interacting with others instantly. Those interested can join the camping community on the Campfire Travel magazine site, where a free magazine example can also be seen to give an idea of the types of articles and contests that are included in each new edition. All 21 editions of the magazine are currently available on the Campfire Travel website as well.
