Writers Strategies has launched a new website that caters to those in the writing profession. The site is filled with tips and articles that are all written with writers in mind.

Jean Welles, a spokesperson for Writers Strategies, says, "Our website is brand new and we post articles and videos daily. If you are a struggling writer or have dreams of becoming a writer, we have something for you."

Newly published articles include tips on how to market an ebook, how to set up a blog and other information that Welles says are crucial for writers in today's digital world. Information is also available for writers who are just breaking into the market with tips on how to market themselves as well as where to find writing work and information on how blogging is essential to writers.

"You have to blog," Welles states. "If you want to be a writer today, you have to have away to showcase your works, and blogs do that. Unfortunately, not everyone is blog savvy or knows how to set up and properly maintain a good writing blog. That's one of the reasons that we are here."

Welles says that information posted daily is designed to help those who are trying to begin or maintain a career in writing. There are various informational articles as well as those that are designed to motivate writers. Welles says that writing can be difficult, particularly when one is faced with writer's block. She states that there are articles focused on motivating writers to push back this block and to continue with their work.

The site is designed to help all writers, from freelancers to novel authors and contains information that Welles states is crucial for anyone in the writing world. She says that the site is a way for all writers to come together and help each other, through reading the articles, watching the videos and sharing comments and other interactions.
