Learning conversational American English can be difficult for many Native Chinese speakers due to the way they were taught in China. By the time native Chinese students arrive in the United States, they realize that American English is very smooth and fluid. Sovereign Education Media, based in Chicago, IL, has now announced the launch of the '7 weeks to a Better American Accent' program, which helps native Chinese speakers to identify the most common challenges and error patterns made when speaking American English. The course is available at https://store.bookbaby.com//bookshop/book/index.aspx?bookURL=7-Weeks-to-a-Better-American-Accent-for-Native-Mandarin-Speakers---volume-11.

Stacey Towson from Sovereign Education Media says: "This book helps native Chinese speakers to develop new speech habits, which can be used in everyday situations. The course is divided into seven weeks with tasks that need to be accomplished. There is a workbook and MP3 audio files, which are required to help the native Chinese speaker develop greater fluency."

The course was developed by Tracey Ingram, who is an experienced speech and hearing professional. Her work is available through https://store.cdbaby.com/cd/traceyingrammams, which shows her commitment to and experience with working with native Chinese speakers in an effort to help them better grasp the use of American English. Students who have worked with her and used her training have been very happy with what they have learned.

One student explains on the course's website that he had significant difficulties adjusting to American English. He states: "I thought I was good when I left China for the United States to start my career. I had mastered all the lessons in my classes and was confident until the day I first arrived to the United States. When I got off the airplane, I had a hard time understanding the words that were spoken. The words sounded so fast and so overwhelming to me."

Sovereign Education Media, as shown on the company website at http://www.sovereignedmedia.com/, is dedicated to providing people with education and enjoyable reading experiences. Books featured on their website focus on helping people improve their lives in general, helping them declutter, master English, travel the world, and become confident, positive thinkers.
