Mainly, they ensure they are empathic to the needs of the loved ones, who have to deal with significant levels of stress as a result of the traumatic experience.

Those who have used the services of the company in the past have been very positive about their experiences. Farid H. says on the company's Facebook page: "Great service and professionalism. Highly

"Up until the turn of the century, the impacting task of cleaning up a crime scene was left to the skills and attention of the victim's family," explains Alexander Felsch. "As you can imagine, this must have been an especially macabre situation for those still grieving the loss of their kin. We are one of the small companies that have started to open up across the country to help take over this task."

The company fully understands the risks and dangers involved in particular at a crime scene cleanup. Blood, for instance, is known to potentially carry disease pathogens that pose a health risk. Biohazard Cleanup USA meets all the relevant OSHA standards and all staff members have received professional training to help them remain safe.
