Adam Elements, a leading brand in smart electronic products and Apple accessories, has announced the addition of their latest product, the iKlips II flash drive. The iKlips II allows the user to share files between iOS devices and PC or Mac easily.

"The iKlips first-generation was a success, but we felt like something was missing," an Adam representative stated. "We decided to take a step further by improving the form and function to match the latest iOS range. The iKlips II new extended connector mates with users phones easily without having to take the protective shell off," he added.

The iKlips II is a flash drive for all iOS devices, certified and licensed by Apple as a MFI, "Made for iPhone, iPad and iPod" product. The iKlips II is offered in different capacities -- 32GB, 64GB, and 128GB -- for users to enjoy.

The device supports the ex-Fat format, meaning users can transfer files regardless of their size. It also records videos in 4k and takes pictures without having to save them to the phone. The iKlips II pairs with its free app, available in the App Store for users to download.

Adam Elements is known for producing useful and stylish products, and the iKlips II is no exception. It comes with a high-strength aluminum casing and a silicone cover that provides flexible protection to the body. Its design attaches to backpacks and bags for users' convenience. The iKlips II, along with other Apple supported products by Adam Elements is available for purchase on amazon.com.
