Eliason said that this is a can't miss event as Stirling, in a tweet, promised to bring an "epic & unforgettable performance to your town."

The 31-year-old violinist didn't hold back in her excitement about the tour in another tweet: "In case you missed it, my dreams are coming true this summer and @evanescence and I are going on tour together."

The concert is part of a North American tour that Stirling, a Billboard Award-winning electronic violinist, will co-headline with two-time Grammy-winning rock band Evanescence this summer.

Throughout the tour, Evanescence and Stirling will perform alongside a full orchestra.

The two artists recently collaborated on the song "Hi-Lo," off Evanescence's 2017 album, Synthesis. Last year, Stirling also released her own solo album, Warmer in the Winter.

The tour starts July 6th at the Starlight Theatre in Kansas City, Missouri and wraps September 8th at the Sunlight Supply Amphitheater.

Tickets for most shows go on sale March 9th at 10 a.m. local time via Live Nation. Both Evanescence and Stirling will host their own pre-sales as well and offer a limited number of VIP packages starting March 7th at 10 a.m. local time. Complete information is available on both artists' websites.
