Adam Elements, a leading brand in smart electronic products and Apple accessories, releases the iKlips miReader, an iOS flash drive that can read microSD cards and offers a Micro USB connection on one end.

"We created a groundbreaking device that offers users extra space for their iPhone or iPad," an Adam spokesperson said. The device works by sliding a microSD card into the compact iKlips miReader and connecting it to iPhones or iPads. Once it's connected to a device, it instantly opens its app. Users can see that the iKlips miReader extends devices memory, transfers files, helps view videos stored on the microSD card, backups information, captures pictures and videos, and charges the device in use using a Micro USB cable. This on-the-go device facilitates tasks for people that like adventures as it offers a wide range of possibilities.

"Anyone with an iPhone 7 or earlier versions, are guaranteed high quality as it is an Apple MFi certified device," the spokesperson added. "This is the perfect device when wanting to edit videos or pictures right after they are taken from GoPros or drones and need to be shared instantly."

The iKlips miReader pairs to its free iKlips app that allows users to manage and secure their information according to their needs. Another advantage of using this small device is that users are not required to have an internet connection to use the device and its app. The iKlips miReader features an extended lightning connector allowing users to keep their protective case on their phone while using it. It is now available in black and white on Amazon.com.
