May 16, 2018 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Baltimore, MD - In a recent blog post, Dr. Schreiber of Baltimore Plastic and Cosmetic Surgery Center discusses tummy tucks and how long a woman should wait to have a tummy tuck following a C-section. He explains that many new mothers are so eager to get their pre-pregnancy body back that they do not safely consider the amount of time needed to recover from childbirth before undergoing cosmetic procedures.

The blog tells readers that it is important to wait at least six to twelve months after a C-section before having a tummy tuck. It goes on further to suggest ways a woman who just gave birth can prepare her body for cosmetic surgery. The doctors at Baltimore Plastic and Cosmetic Surgery Center hope that knowing important pieces of information like this will help patients get the best results from their procedures and recover as easily as possible.

Dr. Schreiber uses his platform on <http://www.baltimoreplasticsurgery.com> to educate the public about recent advances in plastic and cosmetic surgery. He explains that while there is a lot of information on the internet concerning cosmetic procedures, not all of it is reliable and he wanted to add the point of view of a professional to help guide his patients.

Dr. Jeffrey Schreiber performs everything from breast augmentation to facial rejuvenation in Baltimore. Anyone with questions regarding cosmetic surgery, including a facelift in Baltimore, or who would like to schedule a consultation can contact Baltimore Plastic Surgery.
