BYOB Hot Sauce, which is based in Lake Providence, LA, has recently announced their Pepper Pyramid Hot Sauce Challenge. They have been happy to see that Tim McGraw and his band have taken this challenge on. In fact, Tim has issued a challenge to others to see how far they can make it up the pyramid, and he posted his video channel on his website, YouTube, Instagram, Twitter, and Facebook accounts.

"We were so excited to see Tim McGraw take on the challenge," says Ricky Hooter from BYOB Hot Sauce. "We are particularly impressed with the fact that he made it all the way to the top, as did most of his band mates, although not all. It's a tough challenge, but as you can see from Tim's videos, it is also a whole lot of fun, so we hope that you will take it on as well." Those wanting to take part can purchase a Hot Sauce Gift set through Amazon.

The Hot Sauce Challenge video has been viewed over 65,000 times on Facebook alone and it has been shared over 400 times. Many people have used it to challenge their own friends and family members. Ricky Hooter continues: "We can't wait to see how other people fare with our challenge. It's a tough one, really, but we have faith in our customers' ability to do it. And remember to not eat or drink anything for five minutes after completing the challenge."

The video has been viewed around 7,500 times on YouTube as well, with hundreds of people giving it a thumbs up. Kevin continues: "We aren't sure whether the thumbs up mean that they will be doing the same soon or whether they are simply impressed by Tim's abilities - or both. Either way, we're really excited to see more videos from people taking on the challenge."

The Pepper Challenge is a pyramid of hot sauces that slowly gets hotter, from the mildest banana flavor to the hottest Carolina Reaper. Those who make it to the top can honestly say they have eaten the hottest substance on the planet.
