July 06, 2018

July 06, 2018 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Adam Elements, a leading iOS external storage manufacturer, announces their latest card reader, the iKlips miReader. The high-speed microSD card reader is specially designed to capture, save, share, and backup photos, videos, and more.

One end of the iKlips miReader is built with a Micro USB port to expand the possibility of being connected to different devices, while the other side is built with a Lightning connector for iOS devices. It's able to store, transfer, stream and backup data without having to use an internet connection. Users can access their photos, videos, songs, and documents anytime, anywhere.

The high speed iKlips miReader features a compact design that comfortably fits in backpacks, purses, or pockets to always have on hand. It offers fast transfer speeds after being plugged into an iOS device, enabling users to access their information on-the-go. The iKlips miReader is compatible with iPhone 7 and versions below, guaranteeing high quality as it is an MFi certified device. Its extended lightning connector allows users phone's to keep their protective case on when connecting the device.

The card reader is supported by the iKlips app, which includes a variety of online and offline capabilities. The intuitive, user-friendly app stores and backup data from iCloud, Google, and Dropbox, as well as popular social media accounts like Facebook and Instagram. The iKlips app also features a security and file management function, where users can secure their files by Touch ID.
