

Adam Elements iKlips II Offers Additional Storage to iOS Devices

July 17, 2018

July 17, 2018 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Adam Elements, a global leader in flash storage solutions and multimedia products, is proud to announce iKlips II flash drive specifically designed for iOS devices. "We created the iKlips II flash drive to allow users to capture and share their favorite moments without running out of storage," an Adam spokesperson said.

The Apple MFi certified device features a lightning connector and USB 3.1 to allow a secure and safe way to move users favorite content between an iPhone or iPad to a Mac or PC. The iKlips delivers 32GB, 64GB, and 128GB capacity and up to 150MB/s read and write speed. It also allows the user to automatically back up their camera roll, contacts, and social media. The universal flash drive is now available on Amazon for purchase.

The device features an intuitive app, the iKlips app, which launches when the iKlips is plugged into an iPhone or iPad. The app offers users a camera function to shoot and save photos and videos directly to the drive instead of taking up space on their mobile device. The app also allows the user to record voice notes, as well as playback music within the app. Furthermore, it includes encryption software that password protects files, allowing users to keep their information secure.

The iKlips? aluminum body and the extended connector allows the iKlips II to easily plug-in even with the thickest phone covers. It?s available in both red and grey colors and a silicone cover that protects both the lightning connector and USB.
