June 26, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

NAVCO Australia, a security camera shop in Sydney, Australia, has recently announced that they have improved their customer service and helpline. They want to ensure people know that their online shop is there not just to provide people with fantastic products, but also to answer any questions on home or office security surveillance. They hope that this will help more people in having a secure property.

"Our online shop shows all the different products that we have on offer", says Greg Ashley from NAVCO Australia. "However, we also want to make sure that people all over Australia can contact us for help with whatever security issues they may have. We have extensive knowledge on every product available in our store and we can help our customers with any element of these products."

The word of home and office security is extensive and complicated. One look at the online shop offered by NAVCO Australia confirms this. The list of security cameras they offer is huge and people may feel overwhelmed in terms of which ones to choose. When it comes to security, it is not always a case of the most expensive product being the best one. Indeed, every property has different needs that are expressed only in part by budget.

NAVCO Australia is there to help people make decisions in terms of which security product is most suitable for their personal needs. Once someone has made a choice in terms of which product to use, they will help them through the DIY installation and to make sure that the cameras work and are set up the way they should be, so that they can actually perform as best as possible.

"There are two elements to good home or office security", adds Greg Ashley. "The first is to choose the right equipment and the second is to install it properly. We are there to assist our customers in terms of determining the best locations for their cameras, how to angle them and how to monitor their recordings. And if they have any other questions at any point during this process or afterwards, we are just at the other end of a phone line."

Besides offering a range of different cameras, NAVCO Australia also sells digital video recorders. These are vital in terms of actually capturing the images that the cameras record. While there are also other options out there, such as recording to the Cloud, many people prefer digital or network recorders and NAVCO Australia sells a full range of these, including HD models, hybrid models and more. Naturally, the company is there to help people in how to best install these recorders, maintain them and any other questions people may have about them.
