Under ideal conditions, foundations will last as long as the structure. Foundations must endure many challenges over the years, such as soil conditions to water tables. The foundation is also affected by natural degradation of materials. Foundations bear a significant part of the weight of the house, but that still allows them to settle or move. There can be damage to the foundations and even to the entire structure if the entire process is not completed accurately.

Some of the reasons for shifting of the foundation and resulting damage include improperly compacted fill soils and lack of timely maintenance of areas around the construction. The structure which is located predominately on clay soil. Clay surfaces have a tendency to expand. Clay surfaces are particularly prevalent in Dallas and across the Northern Texas area.

A representative of the foundation repair company explained, "If you have a problem with your foundations, it is important to get holistic repair done promptly. The types of foundations which are most common include slab foundations, pier and beam and mud jacking. We are the most experienced and capable professionals in the industry. We can reliably and affordably repair the construction by our highly qualified professional team. After our work is completed, you should be assured of a lifetime without any further foundational problems."
