Texas Foundation Pros is pleased to announce that their repair service is able to provide all types of foundation repair to customers in the Dallas, Texas area. One of the major types of foundation construction is the slab. Concrete slab foundations, as their name suggests, are constructed of a single layer of concrete, several inches thick. The construction is poured thicker at the edges, to create an integral footing and reinforcing rods strengthen the thickened edge. Slabs usually rest on a bed of crushed gravel to improve drainage.

Slab foundations crack and become damaged if the concrete is not level. The weight is distributed unevenly and the entire house can be stressed, leading to actual structural damage. There are several reasons why the underlying foundational slab can become uneven. Water flow is one of them. Improper compaction of a bed of crushed gravel is another. In some areas, the earth becomes unstable.

When a section of these slabs raises or lowers, in relation to other areas, the structure develops cracks. As there is continued movement, the crack can further increase in size and negative effect. Prompt action is necessary to the stability of the entire house.

There are several components to slab foundation repair. The first is to identify the cause of the problem. Leveling the underlying bed and reinforcing it where necessary, is also required. Knowing which tactics to apply to the distressed area of the slab is why a professional contractor is required. In addition to repairing the problem, the Texas team of professionals takes steps to prevent the same or similar problems to recur.
