Foundations are not something homeowners inspect every now and then or even attend to in any manner for months, unless there is a reason to do so. The part of the foundation that remains buried and invisible is usually beyond the scope of inspection for most homeowners. Only a professional has the tools and the familiarity to launch probes in order to ascertain if the foundation is in a healthy state.

Problems with foundations are a threat to the safety of the inhabitants. The value of the property will be adversely revised. It may be a struggle to sell a property that has a damaged foundation. There can be many other problems, from jammed windows and doors to unstable floors, impaired insulation to moisture crisis among others.

A spokesperson for the foundation repair company explained, "The first step you must take is consult a foundation expert or home inspector to understand a problem and to know the cause. There can be one or more causes and they must be identified before any remedy can be recommended. The repair solutions have to be based entirely on the cause of the problem and the nature or extent of damage."
