Bowling Green, KY. - As sad as it is, summer has come to an end and most schools are starting up again. Mike Breen, an auto accident attorney in Bowling Green, KY, shares safety tips for driving back to school. More accidents happen because there are more individuals on the road. Pedestrians, bicyclists, and school buses are in abundance on the road everywhere.

His first tip to helping lessen the number of car accidents is with pedestrians. Mike Breen stresses the importance of always stopping for pedestrians. Even if they are crossing the road illegally, drivers should do their best to stop or move out of their way. Not knowing everything about traffic, children might accidentally run into the road. To avoid hitting them, drivers should remember to slow down in school zones; even if the light is not blinking, drivers should drive slower.

Next, Mike Breen shared tips for driving by school buses. In all 50 states, it is illegal to drive pass loading/unloading buses. If drivers are following buses, they should give buses more distance than standard vehicles. Children can be unpredictable. By giving the bus more space, it will lessen the chances of accidents.

Last, this Bowling Green personal injury lawyer warns drivers to look for bicyclists. Typically, bicyclists have the same rights as vehicles, which can result in issues. Especially with school starting up, children will begin riding their bikes to school. This can create serious problems because many of them typically do not understand traffic laws yet. Drivers need to be careful, especially for creeping bicyclists in people's blind spots. When turning at stops or lights, drivers should be cautious and look out for any bicyclists.

"With school starting up again, traffic will be busier," says Mike Breen. "It is important that we pay close attention to the road to avoid accidents. I want our community to be a place of growth and safety."

Mike Breen closely studies and watches car crashes and accidents statistics in the local area. He knows and understands what things individuals need to do to stay safe on the road. He wants to stress the importance of the beginning of schools and how drivers need to remember to share the road.
