Austin Vision Therapy Center, which is based in Austin, TX, has announced with pride that they now have more than 100 five star reviews. The vision center offers comprehensive vision care for Austin. This comprehensive care includes treatment for poor visual efficiency, delayed vision development, strabismus and amblyopia, learning disabilities, traumatic brain injury, and attention deficit disorders.

Dr. Denise Smith, the founder and clinical director of Austin Vision Therapy Center, says, "We are proud to announce that we have 113 five star reviews as of this time. We are glad because these reviews serve as proof that we have been achieving our goal, which is to revolutionize the lives of people who wanted answers and desired something different from conventional treatment approaches designed only to alleviate symptoms."

For instance, Aaron W. says, "Great experience with Dr. Smith. Id been having difficulty with reading, experiencing a lot of fatigue, sleepiness, eyestrain, losing my place, having to re-read the same sentences over and over. She did a very thorough exam of how my eyes work together and put me through some tests that challenged me to determine the extent of my problem. Then she reviewed all her findings with me so that I could understand the reason for my frustrating problem, and then she created a plan for me that would include some therapy in the office, but also some stuff I could do on my own (which actually saves me some money too). All in all, looking forward to working with Dr. Smith and her staff, and would recommend the office to anyone with similar reading, learning, or eye alignment problems."

Meanwhile, Lynae P. says, "I brought my 7 year old daughter in for an initial consultation. Dr. Bailey made her feel so comfortable. She repeatedly told me, in the short 30 minutes we were there, "I love this place! Can we come back!" She even ran across the room to give Dr. Bailey a big hug before we left. Its important to me that she feels comfortable with this process, and I know that would be the case here. Dr. Bailey was very patient in the consultation, and gave me his honest assessment of why he thought she could benefit from vision therapy."

Dr. Smith says, "We have a skilled and highly professional Austin eye care team dedicated to providing our patients with excellent vision therapy Austin has to offer. Our team is known for going the extra mile, making a difference, and formulating new solutions to insure our patients receive the highest quality of care possible."

Dr. Denise Smith, the founder and clinical director, is an optometrist. She says that she says that she is an optimist at heart and "that no matter how difficult or complex things are, there is always a solution. At Austin Vision Therapy Center, my main duty is to diagnose and treat visual disorders that negatively affect people's lives. I give people options that they didn't have before; that they didn't even know existed."

Joining Dr. Smith are Patrick Lauren, who handles business operations; Tracie Lynn Strange as office manager; Marcella Brown as optometric vision therapist; and Annie Jordan, a Certified Optometric Vision Therapist.

Dr. Smith says that because the developmental optometry is a continually evolving field, she and her team always strive to be at the forefront of trying to include new procedures into their treatment programs.

Austin Vision Therapy Center offers treatments for various conditions, such as poor focusing, crossed or wandering eyes, "lazy eye", headaches, poor eye tracking, and reduced academic performance. Vision therapy, which is also known as visual training, is not just about eye exercises. At its core is a personalized treatment program that is prescribed and then supervised by an optometrist as a way to enhance visual skills, improve visual information processing, and eliminate visual discomfort.

The treatment programs are suitable for those who have a functional visual problem, including children. These are people who are experiencing difficulties in learning or processing information because of poor visual capability. This includes problems in focusing, eye-hand coordination, tracking, visual memory, and coordinating the eyes and body. The result of the treatment is improved vision and enhanced sports, social, professional, and academic performance.

Austin Vision Therapy Center offers complimentary consultation to discuss children's concerns regarding their visual system so that potential next steps can be recommended.
