Dallas Foundation Repair Company Provides Free Plumbing Test

October 02, 2018

October 02, 2018 -

Texas Foundation Pros of Dallas are pleased to announce that as part of their full-service repair projects, a plumbing test is conducted at the close of the construction work. When repairs on foundations are needed, one sign can be plumbing connections which are not working correctly. Unexplained leaks can be a result of shifting of the structure, putting pressure on pipes and connections. When the Dallas-based contractors complete their foundation repair project, they do a free plumbing test to ensure that everything is in proper alignment.

Compaction of the soil is a key element in proper foundation installation. When there is uneven soil, causing high, low, or soft spots, the entire structure can be affected. Repair of the underlying structure of a building requires knowledge of processes and products. It also requires equipment and an understanding of any causes of damages. Texas Foundation Pros meets each of these criteria.

Leaking pipes under a house can cause issues with foundations. Running water may wash away the underlying bed on which a slab or piers rest. Usually this is sand and gravel. Missing spots in the surface can cause cracks to develop which may affect the stability of entire structures. A thorough assessment by the qualified professionals will spotlight the underlying cause of damages and ensure that it doesn't worsen because of repairs.

A company representative explains about the process of repair, "We do a full review and assessment of problems with the customer's structure damages due to foundational issues. These problems may or may not show up as plumbing leaks or broken connections. Even when the plumbing appears to be in proper operating condition, making corrections to the structure may cause loose connections. The reason for the plumbing test is to ensure that nothing done to fix the structure has caused damage to the plumbing connections."
