October 17, 2018

October 17, 2018 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Perseverance Pest Control in Fishers, Indiana, has announced that they are now offering pest control services for the fall season. The company has also warned that a warmer fall means more issues of bugs and states that they are ready to provide pest control services for homeowners in and around the Fishers area.

A representative for the company says, "This fall has been unseasonably warm, which means that all of those bugs that normally take a hike in colder weather are still hanging around. Now is the time to have your home treated to take care of those bugs, and any others that may come along when it gets colder."

The company states that they get a lot of calls from homeowners in the fall, stating that they have a large number of spiders. They point out that spiders will search for a warm place to sleep when the temperatures begin to drop and say that now that the weather has turned colder, homeowners may find that they are seeing a number of spiders in their homes, in addition to flies, gnats and other insects that are still around from the warmer weather.

"It's like a double whammy of insect infestations," says the company representative. "You have the bugs that are still hanging around from summer and then the ones that are more evident in fall and you just want them all to be gone from your home."

The company says that seeing spiders is not necessarily a symptom of fall but that they do often seem to be more present during the cooler months. They state that while not all spiders are dangerous, there are a few in Indiana that can cause serious health issues if a homeowner or their family member is bitten. Spider bites are not as uncommon as many people believe them to be and there are several poisonous varieties in the United States today. Perseverance Pest Control says that homeowners should not take these spiders for granted and that they should contact the company today for a home inspection and get a quote for pest control services.

The company says that spiders are not the only problems that homeowners may see during the colder months. Mice also seek shelter when the temperatures begin to drop, which could mean a major problem for some homeowners. Mice find openings in and under homes and do not require much space in order to enter into a building. The company points out that mice is a plural term because no one has just one mouse. Often, mice travel together and seek shelter together so any homeowner who has noticed the signs of a mouse, will likely have more than one.

Mice become a problem in the colder months, as well, particularly in colder climates such as Indiana. The state often has heavy snows and temperatures that can reach below zero for days at a time. Perseverance Pest Control says that because of this, mice are a likely issue for homeowners in and around the Indianapolis area. The company states that that they have a very effective method for removing those mice and urge homeowners to contact them at the first signs of an infestation as mice can often carry diseases and may get into foods, chew through power cords and cause a number of other issues in the home.

The company says that, in general, homeowners are unaware of all of the problems that they could face in the coming fall months. Since this year has been so warm, there are still concerns of flies and other insects that can get into food sources and often carry disease. Other concerns involve pests that may try to enter homes during the colder months in order to protect themselves from the freezing temperatures. The company states that with all of those concerns at once, it can be overwhelming for homeowners who may feel that they can better treat their homes themselves. They state that over the counter pest control treatments often do not treat more than one pest at a time, which would mean several chemicals that would need to be used. The company says that a better way is to contact a professional pest control company who can effectively treat for all pests at once.

Homeowners in and around the Fisher, Indiana area who would like to learn more about pest control services for fall or the upcoming winter months can visit the company on their official website or contact them directly to receive a quote for pest control services.
