

FTL Creates a New Scholarship Program for Trade Schools

December 17, 2018

December 17, 2018 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

FTL, a company that services California, recently decided to create a scholarship program for residents of California who are looking to go to a trade school instead of college.

James Hall, director of operations at FTL, explained the reason why: "Today a lot of young adults are opting to go to a trade school versus a traditional college. We want to emphasize that there is nothing wrong with that. In fact, there are many reasons people should want to go to a trade school," he says. Today the cost of a college education can well exceed $100,000 or more, and a lot of times people don't even have a degree that can make any money.

California is not cheap to live in. It generally ranks in the top 3 of most expensive states to live in, Hall states. When people include medical costs, housing costs, daycare costs, retirement costs, and people sometimes providing for elderly family members, the middle class in America can get crushed.

FTL can be reached toll free at (844) 254-7170 and a friendly representative is available to help with any situation. To get more information about the scholarship program visit the website of Family Title in California here: <https://familytitleloans.org/> Or learn more here.

The scholarship program works like this: Students will submit a 500 word application along with references and a list of what they want their future career to look like. The essay should include previous examples of work, job history, and other experiences including any volunteer work.
