October 17, 2018

October 17, 2018 -
North Bay, Ontario based XP Labs has announced that they are currently seeking a bodybuilding and athletics nutrition writer. The company states that they are now accepting resumes for this position and urges those who are qualified to submit a resume soon before the hiring session is over.

John Messenger, a representative for the company says, "XP Labs is now hiring and we want to make you a part of our team. This position is for a qualified writer, someone with a passion for fitness and nutrition and someone who has a bit of experience writing professionally."

Messenger says that those who are interested in applying should understand the requirements before doing so. The duties of the new writer will include writing and developing articles that are focused on athletic health, exercise and sports nutrition. He says that a common article may include something about the popular XP Labs grass fed whey supplement and how it can benefit the user when taking it along with a rigorous workout plan.

"We of course want you to be creative," says Messenger. "You should have the ability to thoroughly research your topics, produce interesting and engaging blog posts, advertisements and other media and have a team spirit in order to work with others for improving strategies and article presentation."

Messenger says that the writer will also be required to attend meetings in order to discuss projects in person with other team members. Qualifications include two or more years of professional writing experience, fluent English, written and spoken, and excellent writing, reading and researching skills. The writer should also have experience working with web publishing strategies such as search engine optimization, content marketing, keyword density and others. Preferred skills include an avid interest in nutrition or sports, bodybuilding and exercise, as well as an interest in biology and working with voice talents. Other requirements are listed on the company's official website. Messenger says that those who are interested in applying should ensure that their resume is up to date and can apply directly through the website.

XP Labs gained much recognition when they released their whey protein supplement. A recent news article cover the New Zealand whey launched by XP Labs and says that the supplement features nutrition that helps to boost muscle growth and to support recovery from exercise. The supplement is currently available on the company's official website or on the Amazon marketplace.

The supplement is produced with cold processed New Zealand whey isolate, which is the most naturally wholesome whey supplement that can be found. It can help to enhance digestive health and give the immune system a boost, according to Messenger. He states that the supplement has become highly popular due to the number of benefits that it offers users and says that the new writer that is hired should have some knowledge of this and other products produced by XP Labs. He says that the writer should understand how beneficial whey isolate can be and why bodybuilders and athletes should take it.

Studies show that it can be very beneficial to the body to take these natural supplements. The whey protein offered by XP Labs contains probiotics, stevia and other ingredients that are healthy and safe for users to take. Messenger says that the supplement contains just the right amount of stevia to give it a sweeter taste and to make it more appealing to those who are taking it. The whey powder has a milkshake like flavor without all of the calories and carbohydrates that come along with more traditional milkshakes. Messenger says that this and other information will be helpful for the writer that they ultimately hire. Those who have experience with nutritional supplements, working out, building muscle, or other similar topics should be sure to mention this information in their resume. Messenger says that they are looking for a writer with professional experience in writing but would prefer someone who also has experience in bodybuilding or other similar topics.

XP Labs states that anyone who feels that they are qualified for the writing position should go to their official website to find an online application and more information about the position. Messenger says that a complete resume should be included with the application outlining any professional experience that the writer may possess. Those who are interested in learning more about the XP Labs whey supplement can visit them on their official website.
