LAVO Skin, a California based skin care company recently has stated that the technology used by LAVO Skin's Microdermabrasion Cream has been substantiated by a scientific research conducted at a New York medical school. LAVO Skin, launched its product as an innovative method for rejuvenating the skin. With the addition of moisturizing agents to the cream, the efficacy of the treatment is multiplied. This result was produced in similar lab tests to confirm the principle of using microdermabrasion in conjunction with a replenishing ingredient that promotes cell production.

Due to facial skin being exposed to the elements on a daily basis, it ends up being layered with dead skin. These dead skin patches seem flaky and produce an uneven skin tone. Additionally, the tiny pores on the surface of the skin get clogged with debris like smoke, dust and tiny particles of dead skin. As a result, blackheads form in these pores, causing them to inflame, enlarging pores. This makes an ideal home for bacteria to grow resulting in pimples or blemishes appearing just under the skin surface.

Microdermabrasion is a cosmetic treatment that employs the use of microscopic abrasives to grind away the peripheral skin on the face. This removes the dead skin cells and any debris buried under the surface. It might also help with the recovery of blemishes and small pimples when used in conjunction with another skin soothing agent. After the microdermabrasion is completed, the skin would feel smoother and seem clearer. However, since the process removes some of the protective antibacterial layer over the skin, it is more prone to infections if not treated properly. This treatment procedure has been tested recently in Mount Sinai School of Medicine. From the research, microdermabrasion was found to be beneficial for improving skin condition when complemented with an agent that promotes healing and cell metabolism.

LAVO's Microdermabrasion Cream uses the same abrasives that are utilized in professional microdermabrasion machines. These abrasives are particularly small and even in size and shape to prevent causing facial lacerations. LAVO's cream also contains additional ingredients that promoted skin growth by nourishing them. This allows the skin that has been exposed by the micro abrasions to be protected and stay healthy, therefore, prolonging the resulting effect of the treatment. Following the suggested treatment procedures, a user of LAVO's Cream can expect clearer skin as it will scrapes away blackheads, reducing inflammation of skin pores and eliminate blemishes owing to the addition of Aloe Vera and vitamin E in it.
