The Law Offices of Kevin Cortright, a law firm based in the Palm Springs, California area, has been recently getting attention for their newly redesigned website. Cortright says that the site was designed to highlight the firm's main areas of practice as well as give visitors useful information on the types of law the firm practices.

"Being scared to call an attorney because they aren't sure what to do is the number one reason people hesitate," Cortright says. "While it makes a lot of sense, we think it shouldn't be a tough decision. That's why we've made a number of videos and pages on the site that give the best information to potential clients. You should make an informed decision, and we can help."

As a Palm Springs Personal Injury Attorney, Cortright has seen a number of different cases over the years. "These kinds of cases encompass a variety of injuries," Cortright says. "Automobile accidents, pedestrian acciedents, bicycle accidents, and even dog bites are all considered personal injury cases."

Cortright says that staying calm and remembering one's rights is vital after an accident occurs. He suggests first that once the vehicles are safely off the road after an auto accident to take down as much information as possible. This information includes license plates, phone numbers, and other contact information. If one's smartphone is available, pictures should be taken and any numbers of the other drivers should be verified. Cortright also suggests telling the police all the facts as remembered without giving any opinions on fault.

"When an accident happens, there are a number of things that need to be arranged," Cortright says. "From car rental fees, to lost work time, to medical fees, and vehicle repair or replacement, there are a lot of stresses and you deserve fair compensation. My team's experience in personal injury cases will protect you and make sure you don't get bullied into a bad settlement."

For over 15 years, Cortright has also been helping workers as a Palm Springs Workers Compensation Attorney in California. "It can be very difficult for people to want to get an attorney for workers comp cases because they think that their company will fire them, but that's not the case," Cortright notes. "If you have been injured at work, you deserve to have your medical bills covered and your wages from lost work time compensated. In fact, we don't charge for upfront legal fees when it comes to workman's comp cases."

Intimidation, Cortright says, is the biggest reason workers do not file injury claims at work. After an accident occurs, their employer might ask them not to go to the hospital or to say that a hospital visit is not work related. Cortright says that employer may even threaten termination if an employee reports a work-related injury, but firing someone after they have been injured on the job is illegal. "If you get injured, whether it's an immediate injury or a long-term work-related injury, you should seek medical attention right away, as well as give us a call," Cortright says. "We will aggressively fight for your case."

Cortright has also helped many people out of their financial struggles as a Palm Springs Bankruptcy Attorney in Southern California, through both Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 filings. "No matter your financial situation, filing for bankruptcy will immediately stop all the harassing phone calls from creditors," he notes. "With our free consultation, we can walk you through what kinds of debt relief you need."

On the website, Cortright explains the differences between Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 bankruptcy. He notes that Chapter 7 is better for those who are average to low income earners who have repossessions, credit cards, medical bills, or other kinds of unsecured debt. Chapter 13, Cortright says, is more for average to high income earners who are behind on their house, car, or HOA payments and wish to catch up to be current. These types of earners have their debts consolidated into a monthly payment with no interest.

Since graduating from the La Verne School of Law in 2005, Kevin Cortright has been working with clients all over the Palm Springs area get their just compensation. Satisfied clients have left stellar reviews after their cases. Mike D. had this to say about the firm on Google Maps: "The talent at Kevin Cortright firm has been exceptional in our dealings together. They have been excellent representation in my Workers Compensation case. I am happy with my settlement."

More information on Kevin Cortright and his form can be found on the newly redesigned website. Visitors can also book an appointment for a free consultation or give them a call.
