November 01, 2018 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Purge Pest Control Naperville, IL has announced that homeowners should start considering rodent control for the winter season. The company states that as the colder temperatures approach, mice begin to move inside homes in order to stay warm.

A company representative says, "The cold months in Illinois can be vicious and even though rodents may prefer the outdoors, they'll look to get inside as temperatures fall. It's not too cold yet, so now is the time to act, before the pests get inside and make your home their home. It's a lot more cost effective to keep them out than it is to try and remove them after they've already infested your home."

The company says that those who need winter pest control services can find out more about rodent removal at <https://purge-pest-control-naperville.business.site/>.

Their website gives details on the specific types of pests that plague Illinois homes, along with an overview of the various pest control and extermination services on offer. They explain that insects, rodents, and other animals will start looking for ways to get into a home as soon as temperatures start dropping, so the best time to protect against infiltration is before winter arrives.

"It's always harder to get rid of pests after they've come inside," says the representative. "Ideally you would take preventive measures ahead of time, to ensure you don't develop a problem later. But if you are seeing or hearing evidence of pests or rodents it is important to solve the issue immediately. Left unchecked, pests can cause a lot of damage in a very short time."

Purge Pest Control Naperville is currently scheduling appointments for business owners and homeowners who have current pest issues, or want to prevent potential infestations. As a component of standard preventive pest maintenance service, they conduct a thorough inspection for signs that insects, rodents, spiders, or even bats might be invading the property. "Mice are one of the most common wintertime problems here in Illinois," says their lead technician. "Mice can squeeze in through cracks or holes that most people think are too small—and if they really can't fit they'll often just chew their way in." He goes on to explain that when one mouse is found, or one area with mouse droppings, it's highly probable that there are many more mice that are unseen. After the immediate problem is dealt with, they recommend thoroughly inspecting the building's exterior and plugging up any holes with wire screen, mesh, or steel wool, to keep mice from returning.

The company stresses physical conditions around a home exterior can draw mice: wood piles against the exterior wall provide temporary shelter, and after the mice have moved in to the woodpile they look for ways to get inside where it is warmer. There is more information on their website with advice specific to properly dealing with mouse control problems. While there are some do-it-yourself products available at big-box stores, most pest control companies agree that a certified technician is the safest route for dealing with an active infestation.
