The Institute of Wedding & Event Design, a school in Florida that teaches event design and floral design, is excited to let students know about the recent post on their blog that describes the themed wedding design skills taught in their event design course. This course will benefit those event designers who have clients looking for a themed wedding. The company is proud to provide this course at their Deerfield Beach, FL campus which is located at 98 SE 7th St, through their touring campus available in over 20 cities across America, or online through their digital campus.

The school helps students learn about event design and floral design and get certified in these fields. The themed wedding planning skills taught in the event design course give wedding planners the confidence to create any themed wedding design that their clients want, according to the Designing Themed Weddings blog post. Whether the planner's clients have a specific theme they want to achieve; like, a Disney theme, Winter Wonderland, etc., or wishing for a wedding with themed elements; like, a rustic theme, Indian wedding, etc., the event design course is going to be a valuable asset in meeting their client's goals. Students can get additional information on the themed wedding planning skills taught in the course by calling 1-800-504-7615.

Megan Primeau, author of the Designing Themed Weddings post on the IWED Blog said, "IWED's event design course is perfect for those that are well into their wedding designing career or just starting out. For their clients that want them to plan a themed wedding that they have always dreamed of the wedding designer will have the skills to do the job." She goes on to say in the post that the school hopes that as an event and wedding decorator, event designers have backed their careers up with some kind of accreditation. She adds that obtaining an event designing certificate will accelerate their career and assist in building a trusting relationship with the client. Students can become an accredited event and wedding designer in a mere 5 days at the school.

The blog post says that wedding designers can learn strategies, like how to first meet with the client in a one-on-one setting, in the event design course. They will also be taught to use this time to get all of the client's wedding theme visions written down. The more details an event designer has, the more ideas they have to make their client's wedding dreams come true. The event design course also educates the students that they should find out things like what theme the clients are trying to execute, what made them want this theme for their wedding, what the client's personal connection to this theme is, whether the client's guests connect with this theme, and more. Wedding designers should ask enough questions to make their clients feel comfortable that the designer has an exceptional grasp of their themed wedding visions.

James Lester, CEO of IWED, says, "And who knows, clients or guests attending the themed wedding may be so inspired by your wedding design, that they're going to make you their next call for their event designing wishes!!" Primeau 's post says that after the detailed consultation has been completed, it is time for the wedding designer to start preparing to make the big day's theme perfect for their clients. They should continuously refer back to their list of questions and answers from the original consultation. They should also continue to check in with their clients during the preparation process so that the clients will find trust and an ease of mind knowing that the designer is making their themed wedding a priority.
