December 08, 2018 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

The Institute of Wedding And Event Design, a professional event design school based in Deerfield Beach, FL is very excited to make their event design and floral design classes available to customers in their in-class workshops or via its online classes. The school's Florida campus, which is at 98 SE 7th St in Deerfield Beach, is very pleased to offer these classes to their students.

The school's accredited classes are for event professionals and those that want to learn more about event design and floral design and get certified in these fields. The school's press page has more information on these two courses. They hold in-person workshops for both courses in 20 cities all across the United States or at the school's Florida campus. The event design course is also offered online. The courses take five days each. Students will be issued a digital seal as proof of course completion, access to the student resource center, which includes all of the how-to-videos, in-class slide show and sample forms. A paper diploma will be issued upon payment of the tuition with instructor access and professional suppliers. Prospective students can get more information on all courses by calling 1-800-504-7615.

The five day event designer program covers everything one needs to know about event décor. Topics covered include backdrops, tabletop décor, business aspects of event design, ceilings, and ceremony. The topic of backdrops teaches the basics of event decor such as hardware, terminology, and fabrics. In tabletop décor students learn how to properly execute table drapings as well as a variety of centerpieces, and styles of tabletop decor. Students learn how to effectively run an event business with sample contracts, templates, and guides during the business part of the course. In the ceilings section they learn how to properly execute various ceiling drapings which includes the techniques & hardware necessary to do so. And in the ceremony part of the course students utilize the skills they have learned to build a four post canopy with their peers.

The company's CEO, James Lester, says, "Our cutting edge floral design courses teach how to create profitable floral designs that will propel an event business to the next level." The floral design course teaches how to execute event florals from the ground up. Students learn how to create centerpieces, bouquets, and corsages, as well as how to properly care for their florals to keep them fresh. Students can take photos and build their portfolio as they learn. Topics include introduction to floral design, mastering the centerpiece, boutonniere & corsage design, designs & consultations, and bouquet design and holders. Students can even choose the date they want to attend the class if they decide to do so at the school's campus in Deerfield Beach, FL. At the end of the class students will be awarded the school's accredited floral designer seal.

IWED also has online event design classes which let the students learn at their own pace with 1-on-1 instructor support. All the student materials are delivered to their home. There are 70+ step-by-step videos to review. The custom built Digital Campus Online lets students learn from anywhere in the world. The IWED student kit allows students to complete their own backdrop & designs for review by an online instructor. Students also get to attend live-streamed lessons. The school is also adding a floral design online program this year. To attend the online classes students just select their student kit, log into the Digital Campus, submit their designs, receive their student kits, watch step-by-step videos, and get accredited from home. Tina Jandreau, lead instructor at the school, says, "Whether students attend classes on our campus, via our in-person workshops or online, they get a first-class design education."

For more information on their accredited classes customers can go to the school's website at iwedglobal.com. They can also contact the company by calling them at their Deerfield Beach, FL campus.
