Dr. Amauri Wellness Centre in Toronto, Ontario has announced that they are providing high dose IV Vitamin C therapy. The clinic states that IV Vitamin C therapy may be very effective in supporting cancer patients during chemotherapy and radiation treatments.

?IV Vitamin therapies are quickly becoming popular,? states Dr. Amauri Caversan, ND, founder of the IV drip clinic. "There are a number of clinics that are adopting this practice and we are proud to be one of them.?

The doctor states that simply taking Vitamin C orally is not going to provide the dosage needed and that patients who want the full effect of this treatment need to take the vitamin through an IV. IV therapy allows for the vitamin to be disbursed directly into the bloodstream which the doctor states is crucial for the most positive results.

Clinical trials have shown that Vitamin C in high doses may help other cancer treatments to be more effective in eradicating cancer cells in the body. Tests done on patients with cancer have shown promising results that when combined with Vitamin C therapy, arsenic trioxide, a form of chemotherapy, is much more effective and provides patients with a higher chance of survival than using chemotherapy alone. Radiation therapy, when combined with Vitamin C through an IV, has also proven to be much more effective than radiation on its own. This treatment was used in a clinical trial on patients who are battling breast cancer. While undergoing Vitamin C therapy through an IV, the patients were also treated with chemotherapy and radiation. The results of that trial have shown that the patients who were receiving a combined treatment of Vitamin C along with their traditional cancer treatment experienced fewer side effects and had a much higher level of cancer cell eradication than those who did not also receive Vitamin C through an IV.

The clinic states that anyone who is interested in learning more about the positive effects of Vitamin C on cancer cells can visit them online.
