December 31, 2018 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

A real estate consulting firm, Cash for Houston Homes, is proud to announce that they are now buying houses directly from homeowners in this Texas city. The company eliminates the need for real estate agents. The company's office, located at 6112 Scott St, is very excited to make the selling process easier for homeowners.

Cash for Houston Homes is a company that makes selling a home simpler because real estate agents are removed from the process. They feature photos of homes that they have bought on the Google Maps website which is at <https://goo.gl/maps/qYpMR6UKv3w>. Devon Thorsby is the real estate editor at U.S. News & World Report where she writes consumer-focused articles about the home buying and selling process, the state of the housing market, and more. She said in an article on the U.S. News website, "Home sellers are seeing a growing number of alternatives to placing their home on the market. The last few years have seen growth in the number of iBuyers and similar investment companies that specialize in quick cash purchases of properties to renovate and resell them." Home sellers can get more details about the company's services by calling them at (832) 280-8305.

Thorsby goes on to say that homeowners can contact companies, such as House Buyers of America, Opendoor and OfferPad, to sell their houses directly. Cash for Houston Homes is one such iBuyer that is a part of this platform that's becoming a popular option for sellers looking for a solution that better fits their situation and preferences. Nick Ron, CEO of House Buyers of America, notes that his company was founded in 2001 so it's been through different housing market cycles. So in a market where demand is lessening, sellers may find that selling to a company rather than an individual buyer will make the process quicker and help them avoid issues, although the sale price is often less than what the house would sell for if placed on the market. But even when the market is hot and buyers are scrambling to make an offer, there will always be sellers who prefer an alternative to listing their property. Ron says. "People are looking for a hassle-free way to sell their homes."

Jessica Daviese, of Cash for Houston Homes, said, "We are in such demand so we are open 24 hours a day as seen on our website at <https://cashforhoustonhomes.business.site/>." Homeowners like Daviese's iBuyer company and the way that they make the home selling experience easier in Houston. According to the Houston Chronicle, Houston's only major newspaper, families are taking advantage of the services offered by companies in this growing industry of tech-savvy real estate companies that buy homes directly from consumers. Cash for Houston Homes is now offering these services to Houston homeowners. Selling to one of these companies means a homeowner doesn't have to clear out for constant showings and open houses and can save money by avoiding a month or two of mortgage payments if they close quickly.

Cash for Houston Homes, displayed on the website Press Advantage, a press release distribution service, can be seen at <https://www.pressadvantage.com/organization/cash-for-houston-homes>. KPRC, the NBC affiliate in Houston, makes note that if a person is hungry they can use services like UberEats and GrubHub. Selling a house? They say there is now, almost, an app for that. In real estate, the new buzzword is iBuying because it's as simple as click, sell and move. These iBuyers are startups with deep pockets that are ready to make an offer to buy a home and close the deal within days. And while they don't all technically have mobile apps yet, the process of selling a home the traditional way is being turned on its ear.
