In a bid to better serve their online clients, AskMaryRD, a health and wellness company based out of Tychy, Poland, has announced the launch of their new website. The new website has a modern design that offers online visitors easy access to the wellness company's services and products, and more importantly the reviews on said products. The open layout allows for effortless browsing and shows the company's main menu offering. Visitors can also see the company's main value proposition on the landing page.

AskMaryRD is a customer focused health and wellness company that provides real solutions to clients' well-being. It dispenses actual reviews of different wellness products available in the market today. The company offers an alternative look to counter the prevalence of traditional marketing gimmickry and misconduct. According to AskMaryRD representative Przemyslaw Sibera, "Celebrity endorsement has become the norm. Turn on your TV, open any magazine, look around on the internet. There will be adverts for the next best thing to improve your health and well being. There will be offers and promises that may seem too good to be true. The big question is do any of these products actually deliver, or are they actually too good to be true." True to its name as AskMaryRD, the company is a collection of product reviews that aim to answer common problems of people. They present this in an unbiased and clear way. They also target consumers that are more savvy and discerning. With the advent of the internet and social media, the buying public is now more likely to research online and offline about any product they are interested in. Especially products from the health and beauty category.

“We at AskMaryRD strives to give consumers honest, unbiased reviews. These will be on products from health, beauty and skincare to diet and weight loss. As consumers have become more savvy, the days of impulse purchases are becoming a thing of the past. The internet and social media is now available wherever we are. We are more likely to research a product before we hand over our cash or credit card. We work hard for our money and are more choosy about where we spend our disposable income,” said Sibera. With the competition among brands at an all time high in the beauty and wellness industry, some knowledge goes a long way. And part of the company's ethos is to offer that knowledge to regular consumers. “That’s where we come in. We believe that you are entitled to know what may work for you and whether it’s worth the money. We want to help you cut through the hype and get down to the nitty gritty,” Sibera added.

Aside from providing product assessments on their own, AskMaryRD also actively solicits reviews from the public. The company believe that consumers' product experiences are very powerful and the most reliable reviews there is. And by sharing these in the company's Facebook platform and their website, it will serve to help everyone, the consumers and the brands at the same time. “This is where we differ from other review sites. We also want you to tell us if you have found an alternative product that works better than one we have reviewed. You as consumers try alternate products that work. And it is great to be able to share that knowledge so others can benefit. We firmly believe consumer endorsement beats celebrity endorsement any day. AskMaryRD is here to help you find products which will suit your needs. We will review products that are safe and affordable. The products will have a lot of reviews, and most important: allow you to make an informed choice,” said Sibera.

Beauty and wellness advocates interested to know more about the company's different product reviews and other services are encouraged to visit AskMaryRD's website. They may also find the company's main wellness headquarters through the Google Map.
