They are also listed out and compared to each of the brand’s top smartwatches based on price, features and specifications.

Apple, being the tech-giant that is dominating the industry, has recently released the 4th iteration of its Apple smartwatch. The Apple Watch Series 4 boasts a 64-bit dual core processor that was designed to perform twice as fast compared to the older models. It has an 18-hour battery life and 6-hour outdoor workout time.

On top of that, it also packs a full GPS tracking and monitoring system intended for the more adventurous types. In addition, the Apple Watch S4 is water resistant and comes in 40mm and 44mm sizes, as well as few options of finishes, silver, gold and space gray.

Fitbit's Versa is a good and affordable option to those who are more budget conservative. It is very compact, lightweight - even thinner than the Apple Watch S4 and is also water resistant to up to 50 meters. It is compatible with both Android and IOS devices, unfortunately it lacks the built-in GPS and cellular option. On the other hand, the Fitbit Versa's battery life is second to none. It can last for days on just a single charge and is recommended to those who are seeking comfort as well as a great device that can offer daily fitness tracking solutions.

Getting an average editor score of 4 out of 5 TechRadar and T3, the new Samsung Galaxy Watch is an absolute gem in the smartwatch race. Apple's longtime rival offer their Galaxy Watch both in 42mm and 46mm sizes and are built like a really expensive and proper watch. It offers an impressive 4-5 days battery life and is also waterproof to up to 50 meters. More importantly, it focuses more on health and fitness compared to its older generation and can auto-detect more than 30 activities and exercises.

Meanwhile, China's rising giant, Huawei, also offers its 2nd generation Huawei Watch. Out of the box, Huawei Watch 2 offers a 1.2-inch AMOLED display, 4GB of memory and 420 mAH battery capacity. It also packs a built-in GPS, NFC, Android Pay and 4G connectivity (optional). Those who are looking for a feature-packed smartwatch can look no more, as there are only a few rivals in the market that can match the Huawei Watch 2 when it comes to spec-sheet comparisons. Though it is not as popular when compared to some of its competitors, Huawei is offering a solid and reliable smartwatch at a very reasonable price tag.

Finally, for the absolute reviewer's favorite, Garmin's Fenix 5 is still gaining a lot of praise from tech-reviewers and users alike for its impeccable design, intelligent features as well as its impressive battery life. Averaging at a near perfect score of 4.5/5, Fenix 5 is a premium outdoor GPS smartwatch that is meant for those who are planning on camping deep in the woods, hiking or biking on lesser known trails. Garmin is one of the pioneers in outdoor gears and clients can absolutely expect no less than excellence. In conclusion, Garmin's Fenix 5 continuously delivers and is definitely ahead of the current smartwatch league.
